HEALING HOUSES: My Work as a Psychic House Cleaner

From making homes feel completely new to actually clearing them of rat infestations, black widow colonies, and other unwanted energy, Sheldon has many stories to tell of his unusual 20 year career. Following are samples of his success stories...

Mia C., a successful architect in Miami, could not reconcile her reality with her housekeepers' complaints about a "ghost" in her beautifully restored mansion. Although she had disturbing dreams about the house before moving in, it wasn't until her daughter was accosted by a shimmering figure that she began to take it seriously. Although her husband refused to relinquish his "rationality", Mia was able to enlist Sheldon's help. His house healing not only resolved the entire matter, it explained why the presence existed in specific areas of the house, which were not frequented by Mia or her husband. Perhaps more than that, it affirmed the experiences of her daughter, her maids, and Mia's own intuition, for which they were all quite thankful.

Jennifer D. was mildly concerned over her four-year-old daughter's nightmares, in which an old woman beckoned her from the foot of the bed, and would send her running to her mother's room crying. Jennifer chalked it up to their new house, but when Delilah foresaw the death of her pet rabbit, Jennifer started to panic. Delilah painted an extremely accurate painting of its wounds (at the jaw of a neighboring Rottweiler), without having been told that it had died. There seemed to be a connection between the dreams and her violent premonitions. Fortunately, she was able to get help from Sheldon, who unraveled the connection between the old woman who had been trapped there after her death, and the malevolent energy that seemed to have attached itself to her. Since they returned to sleeping through the night, Jennifer has become a successful artist, and Delilah a young and content woman on her own path.

Bill and Lara had a beautiful hilltop house in Marin, which, after their boys had moved out, they decided to sell in order to build a custom home in the country. They bought the property and listed the Marin house, but for some inexplicable reason, in the height of the market, they got no offers. After a year, the foundation was laid and construction was set to begin on their new home, but without the sale, they couldn't afford to build, so they finally called for Sheldon's help. It didn't take him long to uncover the fact that Bill's father had spent his final years in the downstairs unit, that he was deeply connected to the whole family, and that his form had appeared more than once since his death. Clear that the feeling of the two halves of the house were different, and that this might unconsciously unnerve a prospective buyer, he set to work on assisting Bill's father with his transition, and restoring the house's integrity, so that Bill and Lara were quickly able to sell it and move on with their own lives.
